Slide No 4

- Article: Men are Mars, Women are Venus (cont.)

TEXT

The painter delivers a vivid and emphatic warning: No matter how great the passion, moments of blissful union are fleeting. In Botticelli's vision of the power struggle between the sexes, woman is stronger than man on the playing field of love. She has stamina and strength; the exhausted man slumbers. But emotionally, the woman's needs are greater -- so the man, oblivious to the finer feelings, has more leverage. The leering satyrs suggest the artist's sympathy for the woman involved with a man whose only interest is carnal. When will Venus become bored with the war god's surfeit of testosterone? For how long will the delights of sexual congress be enough to sustain the relationship? Venus certainly doesn't seem to care if the prankish satyrs succeed in disturbing her lover's slumber.

TEXT

To the right of the sleeping god's head, Botticelli has painted a wasps' nest, a poignant touch suggesting the potential for a painful outcome to this relationship. Ironically, in Roman mythology, among the offspring of Venus and Mars were a daughter, Harmonia, the goddess of concord; and two sons, Phobos and Deimos, the gods of fear and panic. And there is an even darker subtext: The liaison of the goddess of beauty and the god of war was an adulterous one. Vulcan, the ugly and misshapen god of the blacksmith's forge, maker of weapons of war, was Venus's husband -- and the brother of her paramour, Mars. The cuckolded deity would ultimately take his revenge, trapping the faithless pair in flagrante in a net and dragging them to the top of Mount Olympus to shame them before the other gods.

TEXT

The Florentine painter's artistic jewel strikes a chord in us today because it is a candid, honest and witty reflection of the romantic aspirations, interactions, and realities that we all learn the hard way.

- Annotation: The Florentine school of painting, the leading school of the world in the 15th century, was influenced by the naturalistic style developed in the 14th century.

STRUCTURES

- Woman is stronger than man on the playing field of love.
vs. Many guys keep playing the field because they believe the majority of women aren't marriage material.
- The leering satyrs suggest the artist's sympathy for the woman involved with a man whose only interest is carnal.
 - men standing around, leering at passing females
 - Their ruling passion is that of carnal love [L].
vs. platonic love

STRUCTURES

 - I never regretted dropping out of college.
 - I was still kicking myself for not paying attention.
 - You've got to stop kicking yourself. It wasn't your fault that the project failed.
 - Tavare already rued his decision.
- rồi sẽ có ngày hối tiếc?
 - You'll live to rue the day you started betraying us.

STRUCTURES

- regret vs. remorse: self vs. others
 - Regret emphasizes negative consequences on self, while remorse - on someone else. Thus, regret leads a person to avoid punishment in the future, while remorse leads to avoiding hurtful actions towards others.
 - My only regret was that I married her. vs. I felt great remorse at betraying my wife.
- mua xong lại đổi ý?
 - The winning bidder might well have a case of buyer's remorse.

STRUCTURES

- a painful outcome to this relationship.
- Different tones for result?

STRUCTURES

ADVICE VS. UNDERSTANDING

Eve had a benign lump removed from her breast. When she confided to her husband, Mark, that she was distressed because the stitches changed the contour of her breast, he answered, "You can always have plastic surgery."

This comment bothered her. "I'm sorry you don't like the way it looks," she protested. "But I'm not having any more surgery!" Mark was hurt and puzzled. "I don't care about a scar," he replied. "It doesn't bother me at all." "Then why are you telling me to have plastic surgery?" she asked. "Because you were upset about the way it looks." Eve felt like a heel. Mark had been wonderfully supportive throughout her surgery. How could she snap at him now?

The problem stemmed from a difference in approach. To many men a complaint is a challenge to come up with a solution. Mark thought he was reassuring Eve by telling her there was something she could do about her scar. But often women are looking for emotional support, not solutions. When my mother tells my father she doesn't feel well, he invariably offers to take her to the doctor. Invariably, she is disappointed with his reaction. Like many men, he is focused on what he can do, whereas she wants sympathy.

Mr. Vu's English Classes - Confessions

October 8 · 🌐

Conf #361 (by tyk, học viên thiếu năng 6/2016 & tạp dịch 8/2016)

"Câu chuyện bắt đầu vào một buổi tối. Vào những giờ cuối cùng của ngày hôm đó, sau khi trần trở ra vào mồi với challenge ""seven in the pool"", em quyết định hỏi ny e (đã và đang du học ở Mỹ) về ý nghĩa của nó. Đây là một chủ đề giao tiếp rất chi là bình thường, thế mà trong 45p sau đó bọn em cãi nhau khủng khiếp, đến mức mà ny e bảo k nói chuyện 1 tuần (Về chuyện này thì cũng k trách được nó vì chs cứ bàn chuyện học hành thì bọn em cãi nhau nảy lửa và đây là lần thứ 3 của tuần rồi. Nhân thể nói luôn, là ở lần thứ 2 cãi nhau em đã toàn thắng nhờ cách tranh luận tuyến tính bài bản mà em học được từ lớp TN 6/2016. Cứ nghĩ cảnh ny câm nín k nói được lời nào lúc đó lòng e lại sung sướng hả dạ vì mình áp dụng được bài học của thầy).

Anw, chuyện chẳng có gì đặc sắc lắm nếu mà ngay sáng hôm sau em không học đúng chủ đề Gender của lớp Tạp dịch. Thầy ạ, hơn 20 năm đi học, đây là lần đầu tiên e nghe giảng mà phải kiềm chế quai hàm để nó không rơi xuống. Với trạng thái buồn bực vì cãi nhau vs ny, em nuốt từng lời thầy dạy. Các clip minh hoạ buổi này quá quá chuẩn và từng ý từng ý thầy nói đã khai sáng cho em về sự khác biệt giữa nam và nữ. Giờ thì em đã hiểu tại sao mấy lần nói chuyện ban đầu với mục đích là chia sẻ giảm áp lực mà đến cuối thì em thành con điên vì ức chế khi nghe mấy solutions ny e nói ra....

INFORMATION VS. FEELINGS

A cartoon shows a husband opening a newspaper and asking his wife, "Is there anything you'd like to say to me before I start reading the paper?" We know there isn't – but that as soon as the man begins reading, his wife will think of something. The cartoon is funny because people recognize their own experience in it. What's not funny is that many women are hurt when men don't talk to them at home, and many men are frustrated when they disappoint their partners without knowing why.

Rebecca, who is happily married, told me this is a source of dissatisfaction with her husband, Stuart. When she tells him what she is thinking, he listens silently. When she asks him what is on his mind, he says, "Nothing."

All Rebecca's life she has had practice in verbalizing her feelings with friends and relatives. But Stuart has had practice in keeping his innermost thoughts to himself. To him, like most men, talk is information. He doesn't feel that talk is required at home. Yet many such men hold center stage in a social setting, telling jokes and stories. They use conversation to claim attention and to entertain. Women can wind up hurt that their husbands tell relative strangers things they have not told them.
